SUMMARY: Reasons for action are a central focus of contemporary metaethics. Many prominent consequentialists and hedonists favor this focus. We think otherwise, as focus on reasons for action gives our Kantian foes undue advantage. Consequentialists and hedonists should analyze moral concepts in terms of which actions to feel guilty about, which character traits to admire, and in general when to have pleasant or unpleasant feelings. Which events should please all possible minds? On natural naturalistic assumptions, pleasant events! This supports a new argument for hedonism.
